Independent ethical publisher Earthscan picked up the top prize of best overall publisher at the International Visual Communication Association Clarion Awards last week.

Earthscan, which celebrates its 20th anniversary this year, was chosen in recognition of its "considerable achievement" to environmental, developmental and sustainability issues, according to the judging panel.

Last year the publisher scooped the award for best non-fiction book.

Camilla Toulmin, executive director of the International Institute for the Environment and Development, said: "In twenty years, Earthscan has given us the solid evidence and provoking insights that light the way to a more sustainable planet."
